About the Black Student Movement:

The Black Student Movement was established on November 7, 1967. Black Students had grown dissatisfied with the UNC chapter of the NAACP because they felt the black population as a whole was slow to take action and did not adequately represent the needs of Black students. Through photos and documents, this exhibit will showcase the Black Student Movement's achievements and struggles. In celebration of our 45th anniversary, we celebrate the history that has secured the Black Student Movement's position as the leading voice for Black students on the campus of The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.
